The Extradition Treaty with Hong Kong
In light of the State Security Law

Date: 5 September 2022, 18:00
Venue: Room 106, Chamber of Deputies of the Czech Republic
Language: English

Between 2013 – 2014, the Czech Republic concluded three agreements with Hong Kong, including: an agreement on the transfer of convicted persons; an agreement on the transfer of persons wanted for criminal proceedings; and an agreement on mutual assistance in criminal matters. As the names of the agreements imply, each is aimed at a different stage or acts of criminal proceedings. The agreement that has aroused the greatest controversy following the adoption of the Hong Kong State Security Law, and which the Senate of the Parliament of the Czech Republic has already called on the government of Andrej Babiš to rescind, is the agreement on the transfer of persons wanted for criminal proceedings.

With the imposition of the State Security Law on Hong Kong in July 2020 and subsequent acts such as the new election law, a legal situation similar to that of the People's Republic of China (PRC) has arisen in Hong Kong. It is not just the (State Security) Law itself, but the introduction of the entire State Security bureaucracy into the Hong Kong judicial and political systems. Hong Kong's legal system has been fundamentally transformed and essentially merged with that of the PRC. The termination or suspension of the agreement is, among other things, an expression of protest against the arbitrary subversion by the PRC of Hong Kong's legal system, guaranteed by international conventions.

The Czech Republic, along with Portugal, is one of the last EU countries to maintain an extradition treaty with Hong Kong. Both the European Parliament and the Council of Europe, of which the Czech Republic currently holds the Presidency, have repeatedly called for the suspension of the relevant agreements.
